Q6. What tools, strategies, or innovative changes have supported your work during the past year? How did it impact your work - whether in the classroom, with students, or your position?

Using the LadyBug device in class

Taking 5-10 minute walk breaks, making time to check in with colleagues, using OneNote during meetings for note-taking

Open Educational Resources. Not only does this allow for more flexibility with academic freedom it truly assists the students. Beyond cost-savings OER is also more culturally relevant.

Kahoot, canvas, etc. Would like to explore AI and its potential applications in the classroom

Canvas updates, strategies, and tools.
ChatGPT has given me new tools to use for lesson planning and to teach my students to use for simulated interaction.
I have been using TPRS (Teaching Proficiency through Reading and Storytelling) which has proven extremely motivational to students and provides authentic ways to use language. I would love to see training in this area. I have been using movement techniques that have been shown to improve memory when studying for all, but especially students with learning differences. I would like to see training in this area.

Canvas

Hybrid events, although I feel like my/our hybrid events are clunky!
The Equity Flex meeting was great and I implemented what I learned to my classes this semester!
The support and encouragement from upper management has been most helpful to me.

Outlook, Qualtrics, Adobe Sign, and Beutiful A.I. tools are my touchstones. Knowing OneDrive and SharePoint has been critical for document management.

Q9. Please share any comments or suggestions about our professional learning program, including ideas for topics or presenters, the FLEX program, or classified activities. If you would like us to contact you to follow up, please include your name.

I enjoy the flex events and thing they are very helpful
One that I will remember is the fall walking tour through the IVC gardens. Our opening speaker in the spring was inspirational.

Coming into this next year, I'm interested in the development of effective habits that support creative, healthy, team productivity at work.

I would like to have access to ESL specific workshops on listening, speaking, grammar, pronunciation, etc. And not by publishers/sales reps but actual teachers with first hand classroom experience.

There is often a lag for showing completion/credit after completing and evaluating a course. Perhaps a streamlined roster that can be completed without paper/hard copies.

The Comprehensible Classroom website and their Acquisltion Academy could be a good resource for workshops on teaching with a comprehensible input focus in language classrooms.

Often, 2023 Kentfield feels like 1933 Germany. What would we want our equivalents in 1933 to have taught their students about the rise of the Nazis? We can't ignore the rise of authoritarian forces in the US with thoughts such as, "Come on, Dave Patterson! Be practical! There is not much COM faculty can do about DeSantis and his ilk. I teach math!" "Or, "Pleeeeze! I teach real estate, and I have nothing to offer my students about authoritarian forces. Get real!" I feel like we would be right to critique our equivalents in 1933 Germany lower division education if they said, "You know, I am a biology instructor. I focus on my students. This troublemaker Hitler and his ilk are obnoxious and probably dangerous, but I have nothing to do with them. In fact, I wouldn't know where to begin with my students. I'm not an economist, or a political scientist, or a historian. I teach botany, for heaven sake." I feel like COM needs to mobilize against totalitarian tendencies in the US in a more intentional and explicit way.

I love the idea of departments collaborating and campuses intertwining more. IVC really doesn't get the recognition it deserves.
